2017 World Economic Forum

The latest Global HealthCrunch Report, published in 2017, identifies a major advantage to be the increased recognition of healthcare as a key component of global development. However, the report also highlights significant challenges, such as the need for more effective and sustainable healthcare systems in many parts of the world.

The report notes that while some countries have made significant progress in improving healthcare, many others continue to struggle to provide basic healthcare services to their populations.

The report also stresses the importance of international cooperation in addressing global health challenges, particularly in low-income countries.

Overall, the report highlights the importance of a multi-sectoral approach to improving global health, and the need for continued investment in healthcare systems.

World Economic Forum